On July 2, Honor Flight Quad Cities announced that it will be flying back-to-back flights to Washington, D.C., on October 9 and 10. Honor Flight is a national organization that flies veterans to see their war memorials at no cost. The flights are funded by donations. Bob Morrison, hub director for the Quad Cities chapter, spoke about the efficiency of having two flights. "First, it allows us to serve two times the amount of veterans so they can get to D.C. and see their memorials," he said. "Second, it allows us to keep the wheelchairs aboard the aircraft, keep the aircraft on the ground overnight, schedule the same buses two days in a row, and essentially just repeat the itinerary." The October 10 flight will include four special participants; the four Moore brothers - Bus, Pete, Jack, and Dick, all veterans of World War II - will be flying together to see the memorial.
