Visiting Artist, Julie Ann Smith, the only professional harpists I was aware of were (1) Harpo Marx and (2) angels. (And I don't think they cash a paycheck.) Who knew that the harp presently boasted a performing superstar? The prodigiously talented Smith, who will present a public recital at Augustana College's Wallenberg Hall on November 11, has spent several years playing among the world's most prestigious ensembles - including the National Symphony and National Repertory Orchestras - and her solo recitals have taken Smith to Italy, Japan, and venues across the country. She has earned accolades from composer Oliver Knussen (who praises her "exceptional musical intelligence and skill"), Cleveland Institute of Music President David Cerone (who says she "exhibits the highest personal and artistic integrity"), and the Washington Post (where a Smith concert was described as "a mind-blowing display of youthful talents.") And not for nothing, but if and when I get to heaven, I pray that the angels greeting me look more like Smith than Harpo. For more information, visit (<http://www.quadcityarts.com>)
