The Ragbirds

Rock Island Brewing Company

Saturday, January 20, 10 p.m.

The Ragbirds land at the Rock Island Brewing Company on January 20, but after hitting the group's Web site (<http://www.theragbirds.com>), I'm not sure if the New England-based Ragbirds are going to drive, fly, or perhaps simply their way here. Scanning the reviews for this band that blends roots folk, world groove, and pop sensibilities, I noticed an intriguing theme. Cheryl Wilson, in

The Uncommon Sense Magazine

, wrote, "The Ragbirds have gestated a sound and experience so unlike anything you've seen in these parts, you may begin to wonder if you've teleported to another land." Jamie Bradish, in the

Ypsilanti Courier

, wrote, "Their music is not only inspiring and powerful, but a successful experiment in teleportation, as well." And taking a less sci-fi approach, the

Ann Arbor Observer

's Alan Goldsmith

described the Ragbirds as suggesting "a well-worn suitcase covered with travel stickers of world-music styles." The Web site goes on to detail the group's recording policy, and while

"unauthorized sale, duplication, and/or distribution is strictly forbidden," the Ragbirds

"encourage the taping and trading of our live shows. Taping is a great way to preserve a favorite show and re-experience it at home." How cool of them. If I accidentally stumble upon a time-travel device, I'm letting the Ragbirds use it first.
