Corrosion of Conformity

Rock Island Brewing Company

Friday, July 29, 8 p.m.

On July 29, the Rock Island Brewing Company will host a special concert with the acclaimed heavy-metal band Corrosion of Conformity. Which, ironically, is also our office's name for "weekly Reader staff meeting."

Formed in Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1982, the group made its first splash on the national music scene with 1984's Eye for an Eye, a 20-track punk-rock release featuring band founders Mike Dean on bass and vocals, Woody Weatherman on guitar, and Reed Mullin on drums. Nearly three decades later, all three men are still with the outfit, although Corrosion of Conformity has certainly undergone a number of personnel changes since the early '80s, with no fewer than nine other musicians and vocalists, at one point or another, touring with the founding members. (Visit the C.O.C. Wikipedia page for a helpful, if rather complex, timeline of just who played when.)

Yet through all its lineup changes, Corrosion of Conformity has maintained an ardent fan base, and can certainly lay claim to some impressive career highlights. C.O.C.'s Deliverance CD – which boasted the

. In 1998, the band was nominated for a “Best Metal Performance” Grammy Award for the single “Drowning in a Daydream.” In 2005, Corrosion of Conformity toured alongside Motörhead and Disturbed, and earned critical and commercial success for its CD

In the Arms of God.

And now, 29 years after its inception, the group is returning to its roots; after years of touring as a four-piece ensemble, the metal rockers will play RIBCO with a lineup composed solely of Dean, Weatherman, and Mullin, whose blend as a trio was last heard, in album form, on the 1985 release Animosity. Blackberry Smoke

The Redstone Room

Monday, July 25, 7:30 p.m.

The Atlanta-based musicians of Blackberry Smoke play Davenport's Redstone Room on July 25, and the band's appeal is perhaps best summed up in this quote in Cincinnati's City Beat magazine: "If you've been missing what us old hippies remember as Southern Rock, tip a Shiner, pack a bowl, and take a good long hit of Blackberry Smoke."

For legal reasons, I'm obliged to say that the Reader does not condone tipping a Shiner, packing a bowl, and taking a good long hit of Blackberry Smoke.

Since its debut in 2000, the ensemble has been composed of the same five performing friends: guitarists/vocalists Charlie Starr and Paul Jackson, bassist/vocalist Richard Turner, drummer Brit Turner, and keyboardist Brandon Still. And for more than a decade, Blackberry Smoke has wowed concert-goers with their impassioned Southern-rock stylings, heard in such popular and energizing anthems as "Freedom Song," "Good One Coming on," "Up in Smoke," and "Yesterday's Wine," the latter recorded with country artists Jamey Johnson and the legendary George Jones.

Over the past few years, Blackberry Smoke has seen its exposure and popularity increase significantly, the result of the group's successful Little Piece of Dixie CD, its national headlining tours, and opening for such noted musical acts as ZZ Top, Lynyrd Skynyrd, and the Zac Brown Band. Yet it's refreshing to know that even given all this success, the members of Blackberry Smoke remain steadfastly down-to-earth. Describing his fellow musicians in GotCountryOnline.com, Charlie Starr revealed, "My bandmates are insane. They refer to their bunk blankets as 'woobies' or 'binkies.' Paul cries on planes.”

If these are the last What's Happenin' pages you read from me, it's because, having finally found my soulmates, I've quit the paper and am now touring with the band.

Local musician Derek Frank opens for Blackberry Smoke, and for more information on the concert, call (563)326-1333 or visit RedstoneRoom.com.

outdoors with your kids? Consider taking the family to the 2011 Train Festival in Rock Island's Schwiebert Riverfront Park. How's that for a loco motive?

Ha ha ha ha ha! Get it?! "Loco motive?" "Loco" as in "nutty," and "motive" as in, like ... !

Fine. No more terrible train gags for the remainder of the piece. Happy?

It's a safe bet that, from July 21 through 24, railroad enthusiasts certainly will be. Nearly a dozen steam and diesel locomotives from around the country will be on site, and the festival will allow visitors to tour the cabs, watch demonstrations, and even take all-day or two-hour excursions behind various vintage trains.

As it also boasts numerous model-train layouts on display, a railroad-themed children's activity and play area, twice-daily performances by recording artist James Coffey, vendors selling one-of-a-kind mementos, park rides on trains built to one-eighth scale, and more, the 2011 Train Festival is sure to tickle to train lover in everyone. And to help whet your appetite for this special summertime event, try your hand at this quick railway quiz, courtesy of our friends at unTrivia.com

“Hey there, Jeff!”

“Hi, Mi – . Oh, lord. You really have to stop doing this.”

“You like the outfit? Diggin’ the wings?”

“Let me guess. You’re auditioning for the Genesius Guild show, aren’t you?”

“Absolutely! It’s the Aristophanes comedy The Wasps, the Guild’s annual season-ending farce that Don Wooten adapts from a classic work of Greek literature!”

“And you want to play a wasp.”

“Well, duh! They’re only the title characters! I mean, there are definitely more prominent characters in the play, since is actually about a father who’s obsessed with lawsuits and trials, and a son who wants to keep his crazy old man locked inside the house”

The Wasps

“Uh huh.”

“But seriously, any role in this show would be a great one! The Wasps features all sorts of nutty comic scenarios, like that father trying to escape the house by pretending he’s chimney smoke, and an out-of-control drunk disrupting a fancy dinner party, and a courtroom dispute over a stolen slab of cheese ... !”

“And you just know that Wooten’s going to come up with situations even more outrageous than those! His updated season-enders, after all, always take a few jabs at figures of local and national interest, and he really likes going after politicians, so you can just imagine the fun that he’s going to have at the expense of nightly-news fixtures from the past few months!”

“I’m sure.”

“Plus, of course, there’ll be satiric songs, and dances, and a wacky chase at the end, and creative and colorful costumes by Ellen Dixon ... !”

“But if the costumes are provided for you, why are you going to the audition dressed as a wasp?”

“I just want to show them how right for the role I am!”

“But you realize that Aristophanes’ wasps aren’t actual wasps, right? They’re elderly jurors who try to help the father escape from his house arrest. They’re not going to be literal wasps.”

“Oh, Jeff. You’ve never seen a Don Wooten comedy, have you?”

The Wasps will be performed on Saturdays and Sundays July 30 through August 7 at 8 p.m. Admission is free, donations are appreciated, and more information is available by visiting Genesius.org
