South Pacific comes to us with an intimidating load of pedigreed baggage: Pulitzer Prizes, Tony Awards, Rodgers & Hammerstein. And if you add its dramatic World War II setting, its themes of interracial romance and prejudice, its enormous scenic drops and set pieces, and its cast of two dozen plus, it'd be enough for Countryside Community Theatre's current production of the piece to be impressive, and it most certainly is that.

Yet the happier, more surprising delight of this South Pacific is that for all of its large-scale themes and sizable scope, to say nothing of its reputation as the Musical Classic to end all Musical Classics, director Brian Nelson's take on the show isn't the least bit bullying; it doesn't want to knock your socks off so much as enwrap you in a warm, gentle embrace. Beginning with its presentation of Rodgers & Hammerstein's overture - played with exceptional style by a 14-piece orchestra led by music directors Paul and Marcia Renaud - Countryside's season-opener will no doubt satisfy audiences expecting grandeur. Audiences hoping for subtlety, wit, and honest emotionalism, however, might be in for an even better time.
