

Pete Seeger (1919-2014): He Changed the World One Song at a Time

Written by John W. Whitehead

Wednesday, 29 January 2014 11:56

- Download MacJournal 5 MAC
- Discount - Infinite Skills - Learning Maya 2012 MAC
- 19.95\$ xScan 3 MAC cheap oem
- Buy OEM Zend Studio Pro 8 MAC
- Buy OEM Solidworks 2009 Premium SP4 \(32-bit\)
- Buy OEM GRAHL PDF Annotator 3
- Buy Cheap Chief Architect X2
- Buy ABest WMV Video Converter \(en\)
- Buy OEM Adobe RoboHelp Server 9 \(32-bit\)
- 99.95\$ FileMaker Pro 11 Advanced MAC cheap oem
- 19.95\$ GFI EndPointSecurity 2012 cheap oem
- 79.95\$ Rosetta Stone - Learn Filipino \(Level 1, 2 Set\) cheap oem
- Buy Cheap Alibre Design Expert 2012 \(32-bit\)

“My job is to show folks there’s a lot of good music in this world, and if used right it may help to save the planet.” – Pete Seeger

“The world will be saved by people fighting for their homes. Homes will be saved by people who fight for the world.” – Pete Seeger

Pete Seeger, the activist/singer/songwriter who tried to change the world with every note he uttered, died January 27 at age 94, and we are all the poorer for it.

A longtime friend whose letters I treasured for their hand-drawn embellishments and whose words of encouragement urged me to keep on fighting, Seeger belonged to a dying breed of Americans who cared more about making a difference using whatever resources were available

Pete Seeger (1919-2014): He Changed the World One Song at a Time

Written by John W. Whitehead
Wednesday, 29 January 2014 11:56

to them than luxuriating in creature comforts and basking in the glow of their greatness.

Long before the Beatles or the Rolling Stones, Jimi Hendrix or Bob Dylan, there was Pete Seeger, a lone ranger fighting injustice with little more than a five-string banjo in hand and a gift for putting words to music. Unarguably one of the most important musical influences of the 20th Century, Seeger helped to lay the foundation for American protest music, singing out about the plight of everyday working folks and urging listeners to political and social activism.

Born in New York City on May 3, 1919, Seeger – whose father was a pacifist musicologist – was plunged into the world of music and politics from an early age. He studied sociology at Harvard University until 1938, when he dropped out and spent the summer bicycling through New England and New York, painting watercolors of farmers' houses in return for food. He looked for but failed to get a job as a newspaper reporter in New York City, and he then worked at the Archives of American Folk Music at the Library of Congress in Washington, DC. In 1940, Seeger met Woody Guthrie at a Grapes of Wrath migrant-worker benefit concert. Seeger, Guthrie, Lee Hays, and Millard Lampell joined together to form the Almanac Singers, which became known for its political radicalism and support of communism.

In 1942, Seeger was drafted by the U.S. Army and sent to Saipan in the western Pacific. After the war, he helped start the People's Songs Bulletin (later Sing Out! magazine), which combined information on folk music with social criticism. In 1950, Seeger formed the Weavers with Lee Hays, Ronnie Gilbert, and Fred Hellerman. Targeted for the political messages behind some of their songs, the group was blacklisted and banned from television and radio.

In 1955, the House Committee on Un-American Activities subpoenaed Seeger to appear before it. (Read his testimony at PeteSeeger.net/HUAC.htm .) During the hearings, Seeger refused to disclose his political views and the names of his political associates. When asked by the committee to name for whom he had sung, Seeger replied: "I am saying voluntarily that I have sung for almost every religious group in the country, from Jewish and Catholic, and Presbyterian and Holy Rollers and Revival Churches, and I do this voluntarily. I have sung for many, many different groups, and it is hard for perhaps one person to believe – I was looking back over the 20 years or so that I have sung around these 48 states – that I have sung in so many different places."

He was sentenced to one year in jail but, quoting the First Amendment, successfully appealed the decision after spending four hours behind bars. Nevertheless, he was blacklisted most of his

Pete Seeger (1919-2014): He Changed the World One Song at a Time

Written by John W. Whitehead

Wednesday, 29 January 2014 11:56

life from normal radio and television work.

During the 1960s, Seeger traveled around the country, continuing to play his folk songs for the peace and civil-rights movements. Deeply offended by the U.S. involvement in Vietnam, Seeger, along with other folk singers such as Joan Baez, led many protests.

“Wherever he was asked, when the need was the greatest, he, like Kilroy, was there. And still is,” said his longtime friend Studs Terkel. “Though his voice is somewhat shot, he holds forth on that stage. Whether it be a concert hall, a gathering in the park, [or] a street demonstration, any area is a battleground for human rights.”

In 1963, Seeger recorded the now-famous gospel song “We Shall Overcome.” In 1965, he sang it on the 50-mile walk from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama, with Martin Luther King Jr. and 1,000 other marchers. That song would go on to become the anthem for the civil-rights movement and was translated into many languages. Seeger also turned his attention to cleaning up the Hudson River that ran past his home. In 1966, he helped form Clearwater, an organization dedicated to educating the public on environmental concerns such as pollution and protecting the river. The group offers educational programs for children on a 76-foot replica of a traditional Hudson cargo sloop and holds a two-day festival on the banks of the Hudson River every June.

Seeger was awarded the Presidential Medal of the Arts and the prestigious Kennedy Center Award in 1994. In 1996, he was inducted into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame for his contribution to music and to the development of rock and folk music. In April of that year, he received the Harvard Arts Medal, and after decades of creating songs, in 1997, Seeger won a Grammy Award for Best Traditional Folk Album for his album Pete. In May 2009, a broad cross-section of musicians including Bruce Springsteen, Dave Matthews, John Mellencamp, Joan Baez, Ani DiFranco, Roger McGuinn of the Byrds, and Emmylou Harris assembled at Madison Square Garden to pay tribute to Seeger and celebrate his 90th birthday.

Right up until the end, Seeger never stopped speaking out, and he never stopped urging young people to follow their hearts and take initiative: “Well, here’s hoping all the foregoing will help you avoid a few dead-end streets (we all hit some), and here’s hoping enough of your dreams come true to keep you optimistic about the rest. We’ve got a big world to learn how to tie together. We’ve all got a lot to learn. And don’t let your studies interfere with your education.”

Pete Seeger (1919-2014): He Changed the World One Song at a Time

Written by John W. Whitehead
Wednesday, 29 January 2014 11:56

In an interview I conducted with Pete Seeger several years ago, I asked him whether he had found an answer to the question “When will they ever learn?” – which he repeatedly posed in his song “Where Have All the Flowers Gone?”

Seeger’s response is one for the books:

“We will never know everything. But I think if we can learn within the next few decades to face the danger we all are in, I believe there will be tens of millions, maybe hundreds of millions, of human beings working wherever they are to do something good. I tell everybody a little parable about the ‘teaspoon brigades.’ Imagine a big seesaw. One end of the seesaw is on the ground because it has a big basket half-full of rocks in it. The other end of the seesaw is up in the air because it’s got a basket one-quarter full of sand. Some of us have teaspoons and we are trying to fill it up. Most people are scoffing at us. They say, ‘People like you have been trying for thousands of years, but it is leaking out of that basket as fast as you are putting it in.’ Our answer is that we are getting more people with teaspoons every day. And we believe that one of these days or years ... that basket of sand is going to be so full that you are going to see that whole seesaw going zoop! in the other direction. Then people are going to say, ‘How did it happen so suddenly?’ And we answer, ‘Us and our little teaspoons over thousands of years.’

“But I don’t think we have forever. I now believe that all technological societies tend to self-destruct. The reason is that the very things that make us a successful technological society, such as our curiosity, our ambition and determination, will also cause us to fall.”

Rest in peace, Pete, and not to worry. I and the other ragtag members of your teaspoon brigade will keep working to change the world one teaspoon at a time.

Click here to read the Seeger interview in its entirety.

*Constitutional attorney and author John W. Whitehead is founder and president of the Rutherford Institute (Rutherford.org) and editor of GadflyOnline.com . His latest book, A Government of Wolves: The Emerging American Police State, is available online at Amazon.com*

Pete Seeger (1919-2014): He Changed the World One Song at a Time

Written by John W. Whitehead

Wednesday, 29 January 2014 11:56

. He can be reached at johnw@rutherford.org

.