‘Everyone Grieves’ offers comfort and hope to grieving children

MINNEAPOLIS – As a certified thanatologist and professor in special education, Marc A. Markell has helped children with disabilities cope with death and grief for over 30 years. His new book, “Everyone Grieves: Stories about Individuals with Disabilities and Grief” (published by Trafford Publishing), is a collection of seven short stories for mentally and physically disabled children trying to come to terms with the loss of a loved one.

“Everyone Grieves” introduces the concept of death and what it means through seven different stories about children with cognitive, emotional, behavioral and physical disabilities. Readers will identify with the diverse cast of characters, ranging in ages from early childhood to young adult. Each story gently explains death and includes ideas and rituals that caregivers can use to help their grieving loved one.

“People with disabilities as well as people who care about them will be able to read stories about people like them and the people they love,” says Markell. “They will be able to connect with the characters as well as learn about possible ways of helping people with disabilities grieve and mourn.”

“The rest of the school year was difficult for Abigail, but when she felt really sad and missed Mike a lot, she would stand in front of the pictures of trains and say, ‘Mike, one day I will be on that train with you, and we can ride everyday.’ That helped Abigail feel better.”
